I am a Confidant/Supporter

What can you do if someone discloses sexual violence to you?

How you react when someone tells you about sexual violence is important and can have a big impact on the Survivor.

You can use this acronym to help you respond.

Confidentiality — It’s important that you respect confidentiality. Don’t share with friends, but talk to a College employee.

Avoid Questioning — Asking too many questions can be overwhelming, and may feel to the survivor that you don’t believe them.

Respect their right to choose — Survivors have the right to choose what actions they will take next. It’s important to respect their choices, even if they are not what you think would be best.

Empathy — Make sure the survivor knows you believe them, and reassure them that they are not to blame for what has happened to them.

Seek Support — Help the survivor to connect with a Sexual Violence Response Advisor (SVRA) who can help them to connect with other important services and plan out next steps. Finally, remember to take care of yourself. Supporting someone who has disclosed to you can be difficult; it’s important to attend to your own needs as well.
George Brown College Supports Survivors

A Sexual Violence Response Advisor, as a member of the Anti-Racism, Equity & Human Rights Services office, can support survivors by helping them to connect with important services such as counselling, medical support, safety planning and academic or employment accommodations.

Survivors do not have to make a formal complaint in order to access support.
